

Tim Cox Director

Tim holds the position of Superintendent of Wastewater Treatment at the City of Swift Current, a position he's held since the plant opened in 2006. He is also responsible for the City's 14 Lift Stations, and the City's Effluent Irrigation project. Prior to working at the SCWWTP, Tim was a lift station Operator and a water treatment Operator with the City of Swift Current.

In his career at the City, Tim has been involved in all facets of water & wastewater, something on which he prides himself. "Being involved in the different fields give you a better understanding of the infrastructure complexity, the mechanical requirements and level of aptitude necessary for this kind of work. The majority of the public doesn't realize how these systems work, water comes from the tap, water goes down the drain, that's the end of it"! Tim regularly collaborates with other plants in other cities to both troubleshoot problems and to maximize efficiency at his own plant. He has used his time on the SWWA board to make many connections within the industry, both within Saskatchewan and throughout Western Canada.

Tim joined the SWWA in 2010 and has been a part of the association ever since. He has served 2 terms as President, and as such, has also sat on the Western Canada Water board. Tim is an avid golfer and overall sports enthusiast. He and his wife, Karen, spend their summers camping at the Saskatchewan Landing. They have a set of twins, Nolan, who works at the Chinook Golf Course in SC, and Kayla, who is a Social Worker in Medicine Hat, Alberta.
